THE GIRL WITH A REAL SENSE SECTION—REAL APPRECIATION OF HUMOR—FASHIONS OF THE DAY

Few of Us Able to Appreciate the Shaft Which Is Directed at Us—Eliza Burt Gamble's Views on the Subject of Feminism

A GIRL may accept with perfect good nature severe criticisms of her clothes, her disposition, even her morals, but there is one thing she will never forgive, and that is to be told she is absolutely devoid of a sense of humor.

Such an accusation never fails to get a rise. For no matter how keen is our sense of appreciation of funny situations when the fun is directed at some one else, few of us are able to really enjoy a joke when its shaft is directed at us.

Many girls are quick to "see the point" in a funny story, to appreciate a farce, to grasp the humorous side of an unfortunate situation when another is the victim, but themselves they invariably take seriously.

To be able to laugh at and to appreciate one's own little idiosyncrasies are the real tests of humor in a person.

ANY man who doubts woman's ability in the world let him read Eliza Burt Gamble's recently published book, "The Sexes in Science and History." Not content with proving that woman is man's equal, the intrepid author goes a step further and attempts to prove her superiority over the male creature.

"That the imperfections of the male organism are already beginning to interpose themselves between man and many of the occupations and activities of advancing civilization is only too apparent," writes Miss Gamble for Mrs. Gamble, which is she?

Discussing the question of the intellectual competition between men and women, and after quoting John Stuart Mill that "the things in which man more excels woman are those which require most plodding and long hammering at simple thoughts," the author says: "The female organism is not a plodding machine, neither is the telephone nor the telegraph, yet these latter devices accomplish the work formerly done by the stagecoach much more rapidly and in a manner better suited to civilized conditions. So soon as women are freed from the unnatural restrictions placed upon them through the temporary predominance of the animal instincts in man their greater powers of endurance, together with a keener insight and an organism comparatively free from imperfections, will doubtless give them a decided advantage in the struggle for existence.

"The part performed by woman in originating and developing human indus-

The head that wears a crown does not necessarily need to be ungracious. That is, if the crown be only of pink silk and spring buds. That is why this maid can look so happy. The ribbon passes across the front and through a slit in the brim, to hang down over the fair shoulder. Lovely to wear at the first garden party of the coming season.

tries is seldom referred to by those dealing with this subject.

"Not only did women establish the first industries, but they invented and constructed the tools and implements by which these industries were carried on. The fact is observed that woman assumed the role of protector and provider not, as is commonly asserted, because she was compelled by man to become a beast of burden, but because she was the recognized guardian not only of infant life but of the public welfare.

"The mother was the only recognized parent. As the land was held in common, women were economically free, were absolutely independent of men for support. Under these conditions the importance of women's position may be easily perceived.

And after flaying marriage customs past and present, the writer concludes: "So long as the original idea underlying marriage is retained, or so long as woman is recognized as the property of her husband and subject to his control, no matter what may be achieved by individual women, the belief in the inferiority of women as a class will continue. So long as women remain economic slaves, dependent upon their husbands for support, will their status remain unchanged, my goods my chattels, my household stuff."

PNEUMONIA SHOWS MARKED DECREASE

Number of Cases This Week 45 Less Than That for Preceding Seven Days

New cases of pneumonia, 142 in number, were reported within the present week to the Bureau of Health, a decrease of forty-five as compared with the record of last week. Seventy-five deaths were caused by this disease.

There was a pronounced decrease in the mortality of the city this week. Deaths from all causes numbered 424, 146 less than last week. Various causes of deaths as reported to the Health Department were as follows:

Table with 2 columns: Cause of death and Number of deaths. Includes categories like Measles, Whooping cough, Diphtheria and croup, etc.

WELL-DRESSED GIRL'S DIARY

"BROWNIE" STANHOPE never mindes "Pompodour." Talk about the luxuries of Miss Pompodour! I'm sure she never had anything more extravagant than that garment. You're surely not going to sleep in anything so gorgeous, Robin?

When I answered, "Of course not," Brownie gave a sigh of relief and threw off her wraps as I continued:

"You remember Irene Bancroft, who visited us last summer at the lake, with 'cicely.' Well, she graduated in June and I promised to make her a truly gorgeous nightie. She saw me working on one, of pink crepe de chine, and I'm sure it was so much that I said I'd make her a truly lovely 'sleeping gown' for a gift when she graduated. She wrote and reminded me that June wasn't so very far away and I'm trying to 'do myself proud'."

I spread the nightie out so that Brownie could see the full length of it. Every inch of the garment is of lace, and I hand-sewed the strips together.

I bought lace insertion and edging four inches in width. In making the empire bodice of the nightgown I used a strip of the insertion and finished it at the top with a narrow edging of lace. Then I arranged two strips of the wide lace edging over the shoulders to form the short sleeves. This makes the neckline square.

I sewed strip after strip of the insertion together to form the skirt, using a strip of the lace edging at the upper and lower edges. In this way I made a skirt of shirton chiffon cloth of exactly the same dimensions and had the top and bottom finished with a piece edging. I also lined the bodice with the chiffon cloth, but left the sleeves permanent.

I gathered both the lace skirt and the chiffon lining, with an inch and a half heading, but found that the two thicknesses made the ruching about the neck too heavy-looking. I ripped out the gathering string of the lining and regathered it without a heading.

After stitching the two skirts together I joined them to the bodice. You see, I was undecided whether to use a girde of ribbon velvet or faille ribbon about the waist. I looked about for something pretty. I saw a French ribbon in a lovely shade of pale rattle blue. It had a plait edge and was about an inch and a half wide, just the right width. I bought enough to pass twice about the waist and tie in a bow with long ends in front. It was the right blue to use with the lace, and when I had added a small pink rose to each end the color effect was perfect.

I thought Brownie liked the lace nightgown, but when she said, "I'd almost be willing to go through the torture netted out in the halls of learning again if I were sure of getting into the college as pretty as that graduation gift," not a shadow of a doubt was left in my mind.

The diet squad has a new recruit. He is the president of the Philadelphia Chamber of Commerce, Ernest T. Trigg. He ate with us yesterday, when the eight members of the squad gathered at the clubhouse, 152 West Lehigh avenue, for our calories—those shrewd things which are on the tips of every one's tongue these days—both as food and as subjects of conversation.

Mr. Trigg himself ate 400 calories and declared that he had had plenty. He also said he was sorry he could not live that way often, but that way often his friends ordered the meals and he had to eat. He told us he was much in favor of the diet squad, saying he thought it was doing more to help people think about right eating than any one thing that had been done in Philadelphia for a long time.

EDUCATIONAL VALUE "Not one person in 100,000 knows anything about calories," he said. "I for one never did until today. And I am glad to find out a little, at least. Usually we have just regulated our meals by what somebody else says. That is not sensible."

Mr. Trigg paid high tribute to the newspapers of the city, saying that he thought they were doing a wonderful work to put the facts of the diet squad before the public in a plain and readable way. He said he felt that this squad would have a national significance.

Thomas R. Harrison, chairman of the agricultural committee of the Chamber of Commerce, told us the committee had a plan which he thought was really a very good one. It was to have a series of lectures on the methods of this State, if it is adopted. He says that he has been reading about the co-operative school in Cincinnati by which the New York diet squad and below the price estimated by the Life Extension Institute, there is now talk of having fruit for breakfast each morning, even if it is not the menu prepared by the institute. We had oranges today.

HORRIFIED AT COFFEE A number of members of the diet squad, too, feel that it has been a mistake to put tea and coffee on the menus, because it gives people the impression that the Life Extension Institute approves of coffee and tea.

For instance, one of our guests the other day fairly held up his hands in horror when he saw coffee.

"Do you mean to tell me that you have coffee out here?" he asked in surprise. "Yes," I cannot understand that. My doctor has told me that it is bad for the heart and that many persons in this country are really coffee fiends. When you have it in your mind, you print the newspapers it looks as though you sanction it. Many persons who want them will excuse themselves by saying that the diet squad did it."

Robert R. C. Bradford, who is in charge of the Lighthouse, explained that he supposed that the Life Extension Institute realized that people had not yet been educated to the harm of coffee and tea and that the persons who made the menus knew that it would be impossible to "put across a menu" for persons which did not include tea and coffee.

HERE TO "SEE SIGHTS," BECOMES HOLD-UP HERO

Lancastrian Sees Strangers Take His Watch—Leads Chase, Ending in Capture

Charles Hagen came down from Lancaster to "see the sights," and when he returns to Lancaster today he will have an exciting story to tell of being held up and robbed and leading a "stop-thief" crowd that captured his two assailants.

Hagen, who is forty years old, met two men at Sixty-third and Market streets last night. He accepted their offer to show him about a bit. They showed him to Sixty-third and Lehigh streets, where they threw him down, beat him and took his watch and $5. Hagen pursued the fleeing highwaymen, yelling for help. Help came from the prisoners, William Penney, Pennsylvania Railroad construction camp, Fifty-sixth street and Lancaster avenue, and William Jones, 505 Chestnut street, were held without notice for today by Magistrate Penock at the Thirty-second street and Woodland avenue station accused of highway robbery.

CHANGES IN COIFFURES DEMANDED BY NEW HAT STYLES OF SPRING

By LUCREZIA BORI

BEFORE you buy your spring hats profit by the experience of my friend, Jennette.

She decided that the time was ripe for her to find some wonderful creations in millinery, and asked me to help select each hat she drew back close and smooth, and she really smiled when she saw anywhere. I had observed that the new hats are of such a nature that they demand a change from the severe coiffures that have been fashionable for several seasons, so I said:

"You will have to comb your hair differently if you want the new hats to look well."

"Nonsense, I'll find plenty that are becoming," answered Jennette with sublime confidence. We went to the milliner's and Jennette tried on a score of hats without finding one that really suited her. The saleswoman said: "Madam will have to arrange her hair higher at the back and puff it a trifle at the sides." Jennette crossed the street in the indignance she had her hair arranged in the latest mode, and returned to the millinery shop and bought five hats that were extremely becoming.

A majority of the new hats have high crowns and the headbands are larger than they have been for several seasons. This means that the hair will have to be arranged high on top of the head to keep the hats from coming too far down over the ears, and softly at the sides and over the brows, so that the headband will fit properly.

Straight hair is no longer fashionable. It must be wavyed, that the coiffure will have a becoming softness and grace of line, or it must be curled to form fascinating ringlets about the forehead and over the ears. The latter arrangement is ideal for youthful faces, while the more dignified "nodule" is particularly appropriate for the matron.

The coiffure, with the hair coiled in a soft knot on the crown of the head, shows a broad, even wave. The front hair is combed to form a soft, low pompadour, brought well over the ears. After the ends are pinned firmly in place a short part in curls at one side and the tresses are combed far down over the forehead in broad loop-like waves. Then the back portion of the hair is combed high and arranged in a soft knot on the crown of the head.

Still higher than the coiffure just described is an attractive feature of this arrangement. The hair is waved and arranged to fall softly over the brow and eyes. It is to be noted that at the sides it is drawn a trifle closer than in the first coiffure. The side part is an attractive feature of this arrangement also, but the back tresses are coiled in a French twist which is pinned across the top of the head to form the fashionable "cockcomb." This manner of dressing the hair hides hair to become very popular for daytime, as the high-crowned street hats require a coiffure of this type.

The coiffure for evening wear always varies from the daytime coiffure.

MY MARRIED LIFE

By ADELE GARRISON

Dicky's Good-by Kiss feeling might not be an unworthy one. Surely, I did not wish to begrudge Dicky's mother anything that would add to her comfort.

To my relief, however, the older Mrs. Graham put a veto to the taxicab suggestion. "How perfectly absurd!" she said crushingly. "Margaret, I hope you are not one of those modern women who will not get out in a public conveyance or on the streets if they can help it."

I flung up my head, stung to the quick by the unjust accusation. I do not know whether or not I would have answered her indignation, but Dicky, stepping bravely into the breach, saved the situation. "Don't you think it, mother?" he said warmly. "Madge has the real Yankee in her, whether or not I would have answered her indignation, but Dicky, stepping bravely into the breach, saved the situation."

"I haven't been in New York for years," she replied, "and I would like to revisit some of the places I found so interesting then. I want especially to see some of the old churches I saw then, Trinity, St. Paul's, St. Ann's and St. Ignace's. You'll surely have some voyage if you make just at all the ancient harbor towns this town owns," he said. "Better take a taxi, Madge, get money enough."

I looked at him again. To my frugal soul chartering a taxi for a day's sightseeing was the wildest kind of extravagance. If it had been my own trip solely I would have offered a firm protest, but as the taxi had been proposed for my mother-in-law I did not feel like voicing any thought concerning it.

I thought with dismay, however, of Dicky's arrangement to turn over his earnings to his mother. I could take charge of them, regulate our expenditures and try to give something from my large salary. It was the scale on which he intended to provide for his mother. I felt doubtful as to my ability to save anything at all.

I wondered vaguely, too, whether my mother-in-law could. I fancied she did not know Dicky's championship of me.

"Good-by, mother," he said sweetly, kissing the cheek she held up to him. "Good-by, my son." Her tone was almost cold as if she had been addressing a stranger. I remember vaguely that Dicky had once told me that his mother was not much given to caresses; that, in fact, she rarely kissed any of her children.

But I was too deeply stirred to speculate upon my mother-in-law's temperament. Only one thing loomed large before me. Dicky had kissed his mother last.

The kiss I gave Dicky when he left me each day to go to his work had been almost a sacred thing to me. I had hoped it meant much to him, and I had hoped it meant something.

My kisses simply did not mean as much to Dicky as his did to me. I wondered dazedly if all brides went through the same emotional disillusionments that I was undergoing.

Fashion Note

Creeps of Spanish lace are being worn more and more frequently, and surely add a picturesque note of interest and charm to evening toilet, more particularly so if the hair is worn high and is topped with a lovely Spanish comb. These lace creeps will be a fascinating accessory of spring dresses.

Crowns

The consensus of opinion is that crowns in spring hats will be high.

TERRIBLE CONDITIONS IN GERMANY REPORTED

Socialist Deputy Said to Have Told Diet Parents Were Killing Children

LONDON, March 10.—"Thus far only fragmentary reports of the remarkable debate in the Prussian Diet on the food crisis have been printed in the German newspapers," says a dispatch from Hester's Amsterdam correspondent. The Vorwärts, received yesterday, contains the following passage from the speech of Herr Hofer, a Socialist member of the Prussian Diet: "The mortality among elderly persons is increasing at a terrible rate, while epidemics are spreading everywhere owing to the decreased power of resistance. The situation is much more serious than has been admitted. The number of children is increasing and parents are killing their children owing to their inability to obtain food for them. Yet the price of potatoes, which long ago became generally scarce, is to be increased."

Unusual Sandwiches

To the Editor of Woman's Page: Dear Madam—For the girl who wants to serve sandwiches which are a little out of the ordinary here are some suggestions: Spread a slice of thinly buttered bread with chopped olives and a layer of sliced mushrooms. Spread with pounded walnuts and mayonnaise, another slice of bread, egg salad and mayonnaise, a slice of ham, lettuce and mayonnaise, and top off with bread. Place under a weight. With a little practice these will be so difficult in making these sandwiches delish.

Washing and Cleaning Hints

To the Editor of Woman's Page: Dear Madam—To remove color from white goods: When the color has been removed, place the article in very warm buttermilk for three or four days. The color will disappear from the white goods and the colored collar and cuffs will remain as white as snow. Wash and dry promptly. Why Clean? Why clean? One who knows how hard it is to keep white things clean. I find that by using alcohol and an alcohol brush, the white things are kept clean. The brush goes to between the teeth and the alcohol quickly removes the dirt. S. D.

Care of Hardwood Floors

To the Editor of Woman's Page: Dear Madam—What do you advise for the care of waxed hardwood floors? Do you think they should be washed every week, or does this make the wax? INEFFECTIVE. Waxed hardwood floors should not be washed regularly, as water will in time take off the luster. Once a year, preferably at spring housecleaning time, they may be washed with weak warm borax souse, drying each square as it is washed. Then it should be re-waxed and polished. Daily or semi-daily dusting with a soft dust silk duster, followed by a hard rub with brush, will keep them in good condition. Every three months a flannel cloth wet with turpentine may be applied, followed by a small quantity of linseed oil. S. D.

Value of the Section Cleaner

To the Editor of Woman's Page: Dear Madam—Of all the devices which have been invented to simplify housework, none has proved so useful as the section cleaner. It is a small, light, portable device, which may be used on any surface. It is a great help in cleaning the kitchen, the bathroom, the dining room, the living room, the bedroom, the hall, the stairs, the windows, the doors, the walls, the ceiling, the floors, the furniture, the draperies, the curtains, the carpets, the rugs, the mats, the pillows, the cushions, the upholstery, the linens, the cloths, the towels, the napkins, the tablecloths, the bedspreads, the quilts, the blankets, the shawls, the scarves, the gloves, the stockings, the shoes, the hats, the coats, the dresses, the suits, the frocks, the blouses, the sweaters, the knits, the lingerie, the hosiery, the undergarments, the outerwear, the accessories, the jewelry, the cosmetics, the toiletries, the perfumes, the soaps, the shampoos, the conditioners, the lotions, the creams, the ointments, the salves, the powders, the pastes, the gels, the emulsions, the suspensions, the solutions, the dispersions, the emulsions, the suspensions, the solutions, the dispersions, the emulsions, the suspensions, the solutions, the dispersions.
